An Impractical Issue. The Chicago Times says you must catch your hare before you eat him, and you must get into the slave States before you free the negroes. We have heard of an old woman who was sorely puzzled in a sudden emergency how to save two babies and a band-box at the same time. She finally clung to the children and exclaimed that, "if God had only thought to give her three arms, she might have saved the band-box." Those who clamor for slave emancipation wish to put the country in the position of the old woman. We have both arms full already-as much as we can do to protect our own borders. How are we even to send a proclamation of freedom to slaves into the rebel States, much less to confer it upon them? The truth is, we are rapidly drifting into an utterly impracticable issue-just as we did in regard to slavery in the Territories. We are trying to eat the hare before we have caught it, discussing the propriety of freeing the negroes of rebels when we have not possession of a single rebel State of the Union. A greater farce was never presented to the world.

An Urgent Appeal.

The Government makes a direct and urgent appeal to the public for aid that can only be had by the voluntary gift of the public. There are fast upon a half million troops in the field; the fall and winter are rapidly approaching, and the army is without a supply of blankets. Money can not buy the blankets, for there are none to be had. Quartermaster General Maigs has, therefore, addressed a letter to the public, asking contributions or the sale of such blankets as can be spared from family use. His appeal says:

The troops in the field need blankets. The supply in the country is exhausted. Men spring to arms faster than the mills can manufacture, and large quantities ordered from abroad have not vet arrived

To relieve pressing necessities, contributions are invited from the surplus stores of families. The regulation army blankets weighs five pounds; but good, sound woolen blankets weighing not less than four pounds, will be gladly re-ceived at the offices of the United States Quartermasters in the principal towns of the loyal States, and applied to the use of the troops. To such as have blankets which they can spare, but can not afford to give, the full market value of suitable blankets, delivered as above, will be Quartermaster General United States. New York, Oct. 1, 1861. This is a matter wherein almost every family can do something for the troops, and we hope all will try and do whatever they can.

Two Evils in the Way.

Contractors and political aspirants are doing movements of the Federal army than all the other difficulties combined. The first are anxious for a prolonged war to make money out of it, and this they are now doing with immense profits. It is the interest of this class, and they wield a great influence, that we should have a large force in the field, the larger the better for them, and the longer it can be kept in service the more money they can make. These army worms fatten upon the misfortunes and miseries of the country, and they are totally indifferent to the sum of them so long as as they have profit able contracts. And this desire to make money out of the war is very general. But few inquire how they can aid the government, but on the other hand the desire is almost universal to find out how the government can aid them. In a crisis of the country like the pre-ent such a spirit is certainly not creditable to the patriotism of the people, or does it speak well for their loyalty. The jealousies engendered by political aspirants, and the wish to make political capital out of the war, are also great stumbling blocks in the way of its vigorous and successful prosecution. We know not how many candidates for the Presidency we have in the army, but it cannot be concealed that the jealousies of such aspirants have done much to embarrass its operations. These men, in their movements, have more regard for their personal success and popularity than the triumph of the cause in which they are or should be interested. It is more their study to advance their personal interests than the good of the country. Unfortunately, also, there are very many officers in the army, totally unfitted for the places they occupy, who have sought them as the means of political preferment. They entered the army not so much from a patriotic desire to serve their country and with a due regard to their fitness for that service, as to make a plea or argument for the office seeker. There are many of this class who have secured responsible positions in the army through party influence, who are not as well qualified for the places they occupy as the men they command. If the Northern army fails to succeed it will be owing in a great measure to sordid army contractors and the influence they can command, and incompetent officers. The Government should have sagacity and energy enough to cut itself loose from the cormorants who are now so seriously emburrassing it. The hungry crew who have fastened themselves upon the Public Treasury should be sent adrift, crushed out, and every officer who is not competent for his position should be put where he is or be discharged to private life. If the war is to be conducted for the benefit of speculators, the people will soon get tired of furnishing the means to enrich contractors; and if the army is to be embarrassed by officering it with mere political aspirants who secure appointments as stepping stones for civil positions, we can not look for a vigorous and successful prosecution of the war, or the accomplishment of the objects for

By the above it will be seen what they are doing in other States to aid the Government carrying on this war. We have no doubt Indiana will do her full share in supplying the money, as she has in raising volunteers.
